

Employees look for a new style of leadership in the downturn

The leaders of Britain's businesses face high levels of scepticism among their employees as they grapple with the challenges of managing in the downturn, a YouGov poll for FD reveals.

As business adjust to the harsh new economic reality, a cross-section of white collar workers was asked to pass judgement on how well their employers were engaging with them about the key issues facing their business. Their answers - contained in the new FD study A Question of Leadership - will make interesting, and in some cases uncomfortable, reading in boardrooms across the country.
